VOCATIONAL SCHOOL OPENED.

New Plan of Teaching Manual Training is inaugurated.

The Wisconsin Avenue Vocational School, the first of its kind in Washington, was formally opened yesterday, with Frank A. Woodward, formerly teacher of mechanical drawing at McKinley Manual Training School, as principal. It is the intention of the officials of the board of education to have thirty pupils take the course, which includes carpentry, cabinetmaking, and mechanical drawing. In addition to this a regular eighth grade course in English, geography, mathematics, and kindred studies will be carried on.

The vocational class will occupy two classrooms in the new six-room building recently erected at Wisconsin avenue and High street.

The vocational class will be in charge of Walter F. Smith, while Emma M. Smith will teach the regular graded school studies. The other rooms of the building are occupied by the Wisconsin Avenue Manual Training School, in charge of E. A. Satterlee.

The idea of establishing a vocational school in Washington was advanced by John A. Chamberlain, supervisor of manual training, and adopted by the board of education, superintendent of schools, and the board of public works.

PEOPLE NOW THINK GOVERNMENT PAYS

Mr. Gude Says It Is Not Known

Washington Finances

the Inauguration.

VIEW OF BUSINESS MEN

That a large proportion of the citizens of the United States are of the opinion that the government manages and finances the inauguration ceremonies and is ignorant of the fact that this tremendous undertaking and never before handled by citizens of Washington, was the declaration made yesterday by William F. Gude, formerly president of the Chamber of Commerce. He believes that the people of the country are desirous that the inauguration ceremonies should be managed by the government.

"On several occasions when talking about Presidential inaugurations with some of the biggest business men of other cities," said Mr. Gude, "I was astonished to find that they thought the financing of such affairs was managed by the government. They said they considered the inauguration of a President a national event, and never dreamed but what it was managed and financed by the national government. This only goes to show that it is the opinion of the people of the country that the inauguration should be national in character."

"I have served on the inaugural committee and know that an inaugural ball is essential if we are to handle the inauguration of the President in the same way we have those of the past. It is very doubtful if permission to use the Pension Office for the ball will ever again be granted. Unless we have a ball we cannot have an elaborate celebration. If it would be impossible to raise a sufficient inauguration fund when all money subscribed will be in the nature of a gift."

Suggestion Is a Good One.

"The suggestion made by The Washington Herald," said George W. White, the banker, "that the inauguration of the President of the United States should be a good one. I firmly believe that the national government should lend a hand in preparing for this important occasion."

They have always done their part, and it is now time that the government should take up its share of the expense. It would be impossible to raise a sufficient inauguration fund when all money subscribed will be in the nature of a gift."
